Message from the Governor

Jon M. Huntsman, Jr.

"Art reflects not only our unique history, but also binds us together as a community."

As we demonstrate leadership in the arts, we invest in Utah's future. Our children engage life through creativity and creative thinking. Arts education and participation help children reach their full potential and explore innovative ways to make decisions and solve problems.

We are proud to celebrate the arts in our home. As a young boy, my mother encouraged me to pursue my creative interests and use my imagination to explore the many challenging questions life presented me. One of my creative outlets became music. I have great respect and appreciation for this extraordinary artistic form. As parents of seven children, Mary Kaye and I encourage our children to develop their artistic talents and use their creative imaginations to answer life's fascinating questions.

While living in the Governor's Mansion, I have the privilege of being reminded of Utah's great legacy of artistic excellence. Represented in the paintings and sculpture throughout the halls of the mansion are some of the many challenges and triumphs faced by those of generations past. Art reflects our unique history and helps us join together for the future. We share our common heritage in the stories expressed through Utah art.

It is my pleasure to thank the Utah Arts Council for its tireless pursuit to advance the arts.

Message from the Chair

K. Newell Dayley, Chair, Board of Directors

"The joy of creative immersion in the arts gives life and meaning to [arts teachers'] educational pursuits."

My heart is often filled with gratitude for the incredible accomplishments of Utah's arts community. We live among an unusual number of highly qualified, dedicated, productive artists; composers, choreographers, painters, writers, poets, sculptors, dancers, musicians and so many others, all engaged in lifting, refining, and binding us together. How fortunate we are to enjoy their dedicated efforts. How could we ever live without them?

Those who teach the arts, many of whom are fine artists themselves, never fail to elicit a similar feeling of gratitude. They patiently help youth discover and explore the arts, develop artistic skill and understanding, and begin a life-long interest and involvement in the arts. The joy of creative immersion in the arts gives life and meaning to their educational pursuits. And a few begin an exciting and fulfilling journey toward the life of an artist. What would we be without excellent teachers of the arts? How would we learn some of the most important things in life if we could not learn them through the arts?

And then there are those responsible for concert halls, theatres, galleries, production companies, publicists, product distributors, and the like who provide an essential connecting link between the arts and audiences of all kinds. Their enthusiasm, commitment, and optimism ensure continuation of the arts from generation to generation, and elicit public and private support for the arts that might otherwise dwindle. They are assisted by governing boards and arts councils made up of generous, caring individuals who know that the arts are an essential ingredient of healthy communities; those who are willing to share their time and precious resources to make certain communities thrive. Where would the arts be found without them?

All of us need the arts and the arts need us, whatever our chosen role may be. And as we each play our role we will surely benefit from an occasional pause to consider the wonderfully diverse cast of characters required to provide a vibrant arts community. Each pause for reflection will invite gratitude, and gratitude will drive our efforts to serve each other through the arts. Should we not be grateful?

Message from the Director

Margaret Hunt, Executive Director

"The arts are vital not only to Utah's social and cultural development, but economic development as well."

I'd like to express my thanks to the residents, community representatives, and elected leaders of this state for their support of the arts in Utah. Building community, improving lives, and contributing to our creative economy through arts and culture remains a top priority.

Last spring, we completed a comprehensive statewide listening tour that identified arts education as a top priority for Utah residents. This past year, we continued to strengthen partnerships and collaborations in arts education, developing a coordinated long-term strategy. A new 501(c)4 organization, the Coalition for Arts in Utah Schools (CAUS) has been formalized to advance advocacy for arts education thanks to the support of the Sorenson family and Art Works for Kids.

The arts are vital not only to Utah's social and cultural development, but economic development as well. Utah is home to more than 4,900 arts-related businesses that employ more than 25,000 people. We will continue to advance and measure the impact of arts-related businesses in addition to our legacy of support for non-profit organizations and individual artists in the future.

This past year, thanks to the generosity of the Utah State Legislature, we launched a Creative Communities Initiative. These grants will provide seed money for community-based art and culture project collaborations. Our goal is to encourage communities to develop innovative connections among art, culture, technology, community and civic engagement, local planning, and the use of public space to enhance quality of life at the local level.

A review of the Utah Arts Council programs and services confirms the arts are enhancing our lives and strengthening communities. We are pleased to present our annual report for fiscal year 2006.

Summary of Key Issues

Advancing the Arts

Mark England's (Salt Lake City) unusual depictions of Utah landscapes, as illustrated in Salt Lake Palm, earned him a $10,000 Visual Arts Fellowship in 2006.

Listening Tours

To begin our long-range strategic planning process, UAC staff first researched best practices of other state arts agencies and conducted in-depth review, interviews, and analysis. After analyzing the information gathered, UAC launched its long-range strategic planning process by initiating a statewide listening tour. The listening tour consisted of lunch meetings and one-on-one interviews with state and local elected officials, community leaders, educators, artists, and arts organizations. Each tour concluded with a public town hall meeting. As a result of these meetings and interviews, UAC staff was able to gather information about what communities and individuals needed and wanted relative to arts and culture opportunities. In addition to interviews and town meetings, an online survey was posted on our website and intercept surveys were distributed at various events.

Meetings were held in Brigham City, Cedar City, Logan City, Murray City, Moab, Park City, Provo/Orem, St. George, and West Valley City. Attendance by elected officials included seven mayors, four state senators, 12 members of the state House of Representatives, 10 city council members, four county commissioners, and one representative from U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch's office. Also in attendance were representatives of higher and secondary education, Chambers of Commerce, economic development, tourism, and planning.

Personal letters of invitation were sent to every constituent within our database who lived in or near the city in which the town meeting was held. The number of letters sent ranged from 300 to nearly 2,000. In addition, press releases were issued to local newspapers, both statewide newspapers and radio stations.

In an effort to ensure that ethnic minorities and people with disabilities were represented at the town hall meetings, two additional meetings were held. The first meeting was held at VSA arts of Utah for people with disabilities. The second was held at the Neighborhood Housing Community Center for ethnic minorities.

These woodcarvings by Rena Juan (Bluff) embody contemporary Navajo humor with traditional carving styles.

Once information had been gathered from the listening tours, UAC staff put together a draft of the strategic plan to present to the Board of Directors. On September 6, 2006 the Board of Directors held a retreat in which the strategic plan was presented, discussed, and revised. The strategic plan was presented to the Board for final approval on January 3, 2007.

Strategic Plan

As a result of the strategic planning effort, UAC developed the following goals:

- Increase awareness and understanding of the public value of the arts:
- 2. Cultivate and formalize strategic partnerships that broaden support for the arts;
- 3. Foster education and life-long participation, creativity, and technological innovation in the arts;

- 4. Invest in artists and communities by strengthening the arts infrastructure; and
- 5. Improve access to information and resources through efficient delivery of services.

Legislative Actions

During the 2006 legislative session, the Office of Museum Services was brought under the umbrella of UAC. The agencies, which share similar resources and needs, now comprise the Division of Arts and Museums.

The Legislature appropriated one-time funding of $100,000 to restore and preserve some of the most precious and significant works of art in the State Art Collection. In addition, the passage of SB85 authorized a State-Owned Art Collection Inventory Study Program.

This bill required a committee to determine best practices for a comprehensive electronic inventory of all state-owned or state-held works of art. This inventory includes the title, artist, medium, location, history, owner, and condition, with web-based electronic images of each work.

In addition to prioritizing the State Art Collection, the Legislature charged UAC with directing the State Commemorative Quarter Commission. Three designs were forwarded to Governor Huntsman. In May, after receiving input from more than 350,000 residents of the state, he selected "Crossroads of the West," the design commemorating the meeting of the east and west rail lines at Promontory Summit.

Lastly, the Legislature allocated $97,000 to support the Creative Communities Initiative. This initiative provides grants for new, innovative, and collaborative community-based arts projects that promote partnerships in the arts and enhance economic opportunities and quality of life in Utah's communities.

Arts Education

Getting a Return on Investment

After graduation from BYU, Atem Aleu returned to the Kenyan refugee camp to hold art workshops for other Lost Boys of Sudan. Today, businesses often concentrate on "return on investment" to determine the value of a product or course of action. UAC's Arts Education Program was reminded recently how much return we get on efforts that seem insignificant. Five years ago, a young man named Atem Aleu and his uncle came to our door. In very broken English, Aleu said, "Someone said you will listen."

Aleu then took from a plastic grocery sack 12 folded paintings of horrific scenes from the civil war in Sudan. He laid them out on the table and said he wanted others to know about his country through his art. Aleu was one of the Lost Boys of Sudan; he watched his parents die. He and his brother walked at night to reach a safe refugee camp.

Hearing his story, UAC staff called VSA arts of Utah and the Art Access Gallery. The organizations pooled funds together to make space for a short exhibition of Aleu's work between the already-scheduled exhibits. The show opened with a reception with Sudanese food prepared by refugee women. Aleu's exhibit received a great deal of attention. He sold all his paintings and received a scholarship to attend Salt Lake Community College.

One year later, Aleu came to UAC again with papers in hand and eagerly explained that he had just received a full scholarship to the art department at Brigham Young University (BYU). During his studies there, he returned to the refugee camp in Kenya armed with $200 worth of art supplies provided by UAC. He conducted a workshop for other young refugee men, and returned to the United States with paintings that then exhibited at Utah Valley State College's Woodbury Gallery.

Aleu graduated from BYU in May 2006. His post-graduation dream is to help the African Refugee Artists Club thrive, and to support other artist victims of the conflict in Sudan. When it comes to a return on investment, who would have dreamed that a little listening and a few dollars would start such a grand effort and bring so much joy to a gifted and committed young artist?

UAC staff's collaboration with VSA arts of Utah and Art Access Gallery opened the way for Aleu to offer support to other victims of the conflict in Sudan.

Community Partnerships

Building Community Through Cooperation

Forming and strengthening cultural partnerships is a vital component of creative community building. In the Change Leader Institute, a leadership development seminar offered by UAC Community Partnerships Program, participants learn critical skills to creatively weave together the cultural fabric of their communities.

Wendi Hassan, a certified Change Leader, recently experienced creative community building firsthand when she created a collective season brochure for more than a dozen arts organizations and several other partners in the Cache Valley area. The idea grew from a Quarterly Arts Summit, the project of the director of Cache Valley Center for the Arts, Wally Bloss.

Bringing the cultural community together to talk about common issues at first felt like a class reunion, "packed with artists and administrators who respect each other but seldom emerge from their own organizations to see how everyone else is doing," said Hassan.

After much persistence and time-consuming phone calls, the brochure finally made its way to the printer and has become an invaluable resource, making it easier to find and plan ahead to attend performances and exhibits. This, in turn, has lead to easier access and increased attendance for all the cultural organizations in the area.

Even more important, Hassan has created a sense of unity. She avidly reports, "If nothing else, 18 very different arts organizations came together on a joint project that increased our familiarity of and respect for each other. We have projected a sense of unity within the arts community in Cache Valley that actually exists, and in fact is stronger than ever."

Folk Arts

Sharing Through Dance

When Lee Roy Nelson, Arts Education Coordinator for Tooele School District, attended the Arts Education Leadership Retreat hosted jointly by the Utah State Office of Education and UAC, he was in for a treat.

At an evening seminar, Craig Miller of UAC's Folk Arts Program taught some of Utah's heritage old-time dances. Nelson learned a few dances and bought the resource materials. When he returned to his school at the beginning of the year, he received a surprising new assignment to teach Utah History to sixth graders.

Faced with one group of sixth graders described by colleagues as disinterested, unruly, and hard to manage, Nelson decided to use the materials and dances he learned at the retreat as a way to introduce Utah history. As a special treat, he rewarded the class by teaching a new dance every Friday.

These students became enthusiastic, engaged, and excited about the class.

Bewildered colleagues kept asking, "Why don't these kids give you any trouble?" Nelson's response: "It's the arts, and we dance."

Literary Arts

Exploring New Language

Michael Morrow, poet and artist-in-residence, worked with students to write poetry in English, their second language.

When Valerie Gates, ESL teacher at Salt Lake City's West High School, announced to her students that they would each be writing their own poetry and creating a class poetry book—in English—even the toughest gang member was overwhelmed.

The day the poetry section started, a strange man walked into class, sat down, and started eating his lunch. At first the kids thought he had wandered in off the street, and they did not know how to react. Thus they were introduced to Michael Morrow, talented Utah poet and artist-in-residence for their poetry project. Their reaction was, "Wow...he's really weird, but so cool!"

His informal, positive approach connected them, student to mentor. As the weeks progressed, the students wrote. The poems were read aloud—either by Morrow, or by students brave enough to stand and speak. Towards the end of the project, the students designed covers and titles. They thoroughly discussed and voted on each idea to ensure just the right look and title to represent their hard work.

When they received their finished chap books, each student dug through the pages to find their poem. They were delighted with the results. The students proudly gave the books as gifts to family members, their crowning glory being that every poem was written in English, their second language.

Public Art

Guiding the World Towards the Light

Utah's public art projects are the result of hard work by community-based selection committees, and Southern Utah University's (SUU) Teacher Education building is no exception. The committee process for this project demonstrates the challenges committees face as they attempt to select artists and concepts that best fit the state facility, the services offered, and the community.

The committee for the Teacher Education building on the SUU campus reviewed submissions of 107 artists throughout the United States. The committee invited four artists to Cedar City to present their final concept and model to the committee. Each artist prepared well and spoke eloquently about the role of education and educators in their lives. Each proposal was a stirring tribute to Utah's aspiring teachers and their central role in everyone's lives, and more than one presentation moved the committee to tears. Settling on one project proved a challenge.

The committee ultimately chose the stained glass work of Jack Archibald. The description of his art glass project described the artist's intent for the piece to serve as a figurative beacon, guiding the world towards the light of learning and knowledge.

Design Arts

Recognizing Art in Everyday Living

UAC's mission to help citizens of the state see, experience, and value the art of design that surrounds them is well served by the annual DesignArts Utah competition and exhibit. In its fourth consecutive year, the 2006 DesignArts Utah exhibition featured work of 15 Utah designers in architecture, furniture design, graphic design, industrial/product design, and textiles.

Accessibility is one of the side benefits of Rocketship Inc.'s Velocity Composites Handcycle, featured in the exhibit. Though it was originally intended to serve as a cross training product for tri-athletes, the handcycle's reliance on the upper body for power proved it also to be ideal for athletes with lower-body disabilities as well.

This year's judge, Susan S. Szenasy, chief editor of Metropolis, the New York Citybased magazine of architecture, culture, and design, expressed how gratifying it is "to see the large variety of entries to this competition and the many different approaches to making our world better, more beautiful, more accessible, and more environmentally friendly."

Design plays a vital role in more aspects of everyday life than anyone can count, though it is often invisible to most people. One of the roles of UAC's Design Arts

Program is to help Utah's citizens recognize the design around them nize the design around them.

The 2006 DesignArts Utah exhibition displayed Michael Horito and Rocket-ship Design's concepts for their Velocity Composites Handcycle.

Visual Arts

Involving the Visual Audience

Ever since the Rio Gallery's move to the lobby of the Rio Grande Depot in 2005, it has seen an increase in foot traffic. Many people walk through on their way to the Utah History Research Center or wander through while waiting for a table at the Rio Grande Café. Visitors who are not there for the art view it all anyway.

To encourage these incidental visitors to interact more, UAC staff held an exhibit called Untitled. The gallery asked local artist Shawn Rossiter to curate. He invited 30 artists to submit one piece of artwork without a title. Blank shipping tags and pencils were placed throughout the gallery, and each work of art had a hook where the tags could be placed. Titling the artwork then became the responsibility of the spectator.

The untitled pieces challenged viewers to deal with only the visual elements of the pieces. By the end of the exhibit, each piece had an average of 20 titles, varying from sarcastic to sincere. Each title essentially created a new work of art. Many included references to classical and pop culture. Some criticized the work—including one, for a found-object assemblage, that gave the title Better Left Unfound. That was all part of the fun and the goal of the show: to uncover the honesty of the viewer's reaction.

Because most of the titles were given anonymously, it proved an interesting experience for the artists. They were pleased with the interaction. "The titles given by the public revealed as much about the viewer as they did about the artist," said Rossiter. Artists received honest critiques, a window to what the average person really thinks of their work—a conversation often blurred by politeness and intimidation.

Advisory Panels

The dozens of men and women who contribute their time as advisory panel members serve as the "voice from the field," providing first-hand information about constituent needs that might otherwise go unheard. Through their recommendations, they serve as the vital link between UAC Board of Directors and Utah's communities, arts organizations, and citizens.

In fiscal year 2006, 96 experts in music, dance, theatre, literature, folk arts, arts education, community arts development, and visual arts from throughout the state reviewed grant applications, evaluated artist and residency applications for the Arts Education Program, reviewed applicants for Folk Arts Apprenticeships and Artist Project Grants, and performed other critical duties.

When appropriate, panels recommend to UAC Board of Directors priorities for programs, revisions of program guidelines, and development of new funding categories or pilot programs.
